Latest War News.

War Department officials contemplate an army of more than 2,000,000 officers and men by the end of the fiscal year next June, and it is likely that a third draft will be made before that time. In communications sent out to exemption boards and made public last night, Provost Marshal General Crowder calls the attention of the members to the gravity of their tasks, and says that every case must be considered from the standpoint of the nation and not the individual.

The Russian Provisional Government has ordered all frontiers closed until August 15. Stoppage of international travel was resorted to as a means of preventing spies and other undesirables entering the country and as a means of capturing many already in Russia. The trial of the Maximilian leader Lenine, on charges of being a German agent, was demanded in a resolution adopted at Petrograd yesterday.

The defection of large bodies of Russian troops in Galicia appears to have had its effect in Petrograd. Feeling the need of a stronger and more representative government, the political leaders have postponed the Russian National Congress while the Cabinet is rebuilt with stronger men.

The United States will be able to transport all soldiers needed in France is the opinion of officials at Washington. Sixteen German merchant ships, including the great liner Vaterland, will be fitted out as transports.

America's superior resources and the ability of the people to organize without compulsion will win the war, declared Food Director Herbert Hoover in a statement issued last night. He declared the United States had done more in four months than Germany did in a year.

From Indiana.

Wadsworth, July 23, 1917.

Editor News:

As I haven't seen any letters from this part of the world thought I would drop the News a line. I got here the 3rd day of March, went to work the 7th, and haven't lost but one day. Crops look good. Oats are fine—never were better, and the farm, ears will begin threshing in about a week. The Kentucky and Tennessee boys are coming in for threshing. Hands will be scarce. I guess a good hand can get his own price here. Farmers are now offering $3 per day through harvest.

I like Indiana fine. I came here to make it my home, and I haven't changed my mind yet. We had a nice rain-to-day. I wish more of the readers of the News would write. Through neglect I have missed a few of the last papers, but I don't want to let that happen again, and I may be a little behind with Adair News.

The boys here are expecting to have to go to Germany in the near future.

I noticed in my last issue where Dr. H. W. Depp was prepared to extract teeth by the use of Sommoform. Will say this, if he can take them out any better with sommoform than he can without it, he needn't be surprised to hear me knock at his office door some morning about daybreak.

As this is my first attempt to write will close, wishing the News success.

How Uncle Sam Got His Name.

Immediately after the declaration of war with England in 1812, Elbert Anderson, of New York, then a contractor, visited Troy, where he purchased a large quantity of provisions. The inspectors of the articles at that place were Ebenezer and Samuel Wilson. The latter (universally known as "Uncle Sam") generally superintended in person a large number of workmen, who on this occasion were employed in overhauling the provisions purchased by the contractor. The casks were marked "E. A.—U. S." Their inspection fell to the lot of a facetious fellow who, on being asked the meaning of the mark, said he did not know, unless it meant "Elbert Anderson and Uncle Sam," alluding to "Uncle Sam" Wilson. The joke took among the workmen and passed currently, "Uncle Sam" eventually being generally adopted as a nickname for the United States Government.

The Cradle of the Red Cross.

Surgery and medicine did not come into use on the battlefields before the last decade of the 18th century. Before that time wounded soldiers were either carried to the rear by their comrades or left unattended to and exposed until the fighting was over. Surgical assistance did not reach the battlefield until the day after the engagement or even later, and for many of the wounded it was then too late.

In 1792 Baron Dominique Jean Larrey, of the French army, introduced his system of "ambulance volantes," or flying field hospitals, capable of moving rapidly from place to place. They gave primary surgical treatment and removed the wounded quickly from the field. Napoleon warmly supported Larrey, and the system was quickly brought to a high state of efficiency in the Grand Army.

The actual founder of the Red Cross society was Jean Henri Dunant, a philanthropic citizen of Geneva, Switzerland. On June 14, 1859, he chanced to be present at the battle of Solferino and was an eye witness to the vast amount of unnecessary suffering that resulted from the inability of the regular surgical corps for the thousands of wounded who lay upon the field. Three years later he published a book on his experiences at Solferino and advocated an international convention to provide for the aiding of the wounded in war. This convention, which took place at Geneva in 1863, neutralized the surgical corps of hostile armies and volunteer societies caring for the wounded. As a compliment to Switzerland the Swiss flag in reversed colors, i. e., a red cross on a white field, was to be adopted universally and worn on arm bands by all members of the neutral staffs. Geneva has been since that time the headquarters of the International Red Cross society.—From "Switzerland, the Good Samaritan," by Marie Widmer, in the American Review of Reviews for August, 1917.

Play is a necessary part of right living. The boy who never gets half a day off is not likely to break any records raising corn or fattening pigs.—Southern Agriculturist.

A Chance for Some Missionary Work.

It seems to me, thinking the matter over, that we farmers have not been duly appreciative of some of the efforts made in our behalf. We have been content to take without giving in too many instances. There is the matter of advice, for example; we have just been going about taking advice by the cartload from everybody in general and giving practically none in return.

This is not right. It is time for us to change our habits and begin to repay some of the vast amount that has been so freely bestowed upon us. I think, too, that I have found a good place to begin. It is with the railroads.

Even the metropolitan newspapers are beginning to realize that the "food shortage" of the cities is not due to any actual scarcity of stuff to eat, but to the inefficiency of the systems of transportation and distribution. There is plenty of food if it could be distributed where needed. It is not distributed because of a scarcity of freight cars. There is a scarcity of freight cars simply because the traffic managers of the railroads have not yet learned how to keep freight cars moving. The average freight car is said to spend more time standing on the siding than moving from place to place. It has been made a warehouse rather than a vehicle of transportation. In the course of a year its actual traveling speed per hour is just about that of a fast walking horse.

The railroad men have been clamoring for higher freight rates so that they could get more money to buy more freight cars, but they are letting the cars they have loaf half the time. If the farmer was as much a slacker as the freight car, there would be sure enough trouble.

It is time for us farmers to do something. We should at once send "experts" to tell the traffic men of the railroads how to get more service out of their freight cars, how to speed up their distribution of food products. It would be but a fit return for all they have done for us.

So I herewith offer my services at any reasonable salary, to any organization of farmers that feel disposed to pay the good advice the railroads have been so freely offering farmers for the past few years. I do not claim to know exactly what these traffic managers should do to help things; but that need be no drawback. I know that something ought to be done, and that is about the extent of the knowledge possessed by some of the "experts" they have turned loose on us.—E. E. Miller, in Southern Agriculturist.

Don't Sell the Cows.

Prof. J. J. Hooper, of the Kentucky Experiment station, calls attention to the necessity of conserving the supply of live stock and especially of dairy cows.

Of all animals the cow is the most economical producer of human food. A good cow will produce in a year as much edible food as is contained in the bodies of two 1,200 pound steers. From 100 pounds of digestible nutrients in her feed the cow will produce eighteen pounds of solids for human food. This will not all be utilized, however, if the skim milk or the buttermilk is wasted.

Big prices are now being offered for milch cows. They should not be sold however. No good cow should go to the butcher until the war is over. The number is none too great now, and if the war continues for two or three years the cow will be more urgently needed than ever.—Southern Agriculturist.

Why We Are at War.

Some people think this world is big enough to hold anything. It is not. Any number of things could be mentioned which it has not room for. Certainly it is not big enough to hold the nation the United States of America aspires to be and the nation the German Empire aspires to be.

This nation is, as Lincoln said, a republic dedicated to the proposition that all men are free and equal. Despite all its failures and shortcomings it aspires to develop along these lines—to become a more democratic nation as it becomes a greater nation; to lead other nations, by the force of its example, to become free and strong and self-sustaining. With all its record of wars and conflicts, its ideal is peace. The one thing it values more than peace is justice.

The German Empire is the last great stronghold of the doctrine of "divine rights," of the belief that some men are appointed by God to rule over the rest of mankind. It aspires, even as Caesar and Genghis Khan and Napoleon aspired, to world domination. It is based on a belief in force.

For two generations it has subordinated everything to military efficiency. The right of the German Empire to dictate to other nations is an accepted part of its creed. The use of any measure of force or brutality that will enable it to do so is openly proclaimed as a national policy.

Two such nations could not continue to exist and to grow in a world no larger than ours. A clash was inevitable. The world cannot remain half democratic and half autocratic.

This, in few words is why we are at war.—Southern Agriculturist.

Take Care of the Corn Stalks.

The South wastes enough feed in the corn stalks every year to make up for any shortage in this year's hay crop. A medium acre of corn will make enough forage after the ears are removed to winter a steer, but only a few of the acres are doing this well. To save the corn stalks to best advantage the corn has to be cut and shocked and let stand until cured when the ears are removed and the remainder is shredded and put in the barn, is stacked or fed to the stock from the shocks. As this is a new practice for most of us it will have to be begun on a small scale until the art is learned. Corn that is cut early while the weather is hot must be pretty ripe. In the hot climate of the South probably not more than a third to a fourth of the blades should still be green. It is an advantage to start the shock and cut on one side until the whole field has been gone over in this way. Then the corn on the other side of the shock is cut and it is finished. This allows the blades to dry out inside the shock. Just before frost the corn can be cut somewhat greener as the weather is cooler. It is the warm moist weather that frequently occurs in September and early October that spoils the corn so badly.—Southern Agriculturist.

Disinfect.

Keep a can of one of the coal-tar dips on hand and use it often. Keep the hog houses and the poultry houses clean with it. Spray the hogs occasionally. Disinfect the stables now and then. Kill the lice and swat the germs. You will find it worth while.

Of course, there are other precautions to be observed. Don't compel the hogs to wallow in and drink out of filthy mudholes. Nor the cows, either. Keep the manure cleaned out of all stables and stalls and out of the poultry houses just as closely as circumstances will permit. If you have a field on which you can spread it, so much the better. Manure belongs in the soil, you know, not in the barnyard or the stable.

Cleanliness safeguards health, of animals as well as of men.—Southern Agriculturist.

You can steal from the soil and not go to jail. But you may wind up in the poorhouse.—Southern Agriculturist.

Save the Roads.

Last fall plans were made for a large amount of new road construction and the reconstruction of many which were pretty well worn out or in need of more durable surfacing. The cost of maintaining the latter roads was so great that it was economical to reconstruct them and thus cut down the annual cost of keeping them in good condition. The summer is half gone and a considerable part of these improvements has not been undertaken because of labor and material conditions. It is impracticable to carry out the 1917 road program in these localities. That is no reason, however, for allowing the old roads to become impassable.

It is good reason on the other hand, for straining every resource to maintain them in as serviceable condition as possible. When conditions become readjusted, as they surely will be soon, the really important roads of the country will have the attention due them, and the cost of reconstruction will be reduced if the old roads have not been allowed to go to pieces. It is not the kind of work which is attractive to the road builder, whose joy lies in building something new, in creative endeavor. But it is the kind of work that is needed. The road builder must be content to work with what he has to keep the old roads in service even though his neighbors criticize him for not accomplishing the impossible task of maintaining them in as good condition as new roads, just as they are criticizing everybody these days who is doing his bit for the public.

Kenelon Chase Winslow, prominent in church and social circles in Elizabeth, N. J., confessed, the police say, to killing a young woman known as Frances Bradley, whose body was found in a room in a hotel in New York recently.

Backward America.

History surely repeats itself in so far as inefficient highway administration is concerned. Professor R. L. Morrison has recently pointed out. Many states are struggling today with the same problems which engaged the attention of the British Parliament one hundred years ago and were met and solved by the French nearly one hundred fifty years ago. It is very nearly two hundred years since the organization of the famous Corps Des Ponts and Chausses, the body of engineers in charge of the roads and bridges of France, and about 1776, the French engineer, Tresaguet, the real originator of the broken stone road, first proposed a system of continuous maintenance. He fought with energy the old method of intermittent repairs, and the American Highway Engineers are fighting the same battle today. In 1775 Tresaguet became Inspector General of the Corps, and the same year the "Corvee," which corresponds to our system of working out road taxes, was abolished. At the present time, 142 years after France put road administration on an efficient basis, the old inefficient "Corvee" is still used in many places in the United States. So little have we profited by the experience of others.

Summer Care of the Baby.

Overfeeding is, perhaps, the most frequent cause of diarrhea in babies, especially in the artificially fed. Mothers wish their babies to gain in weight and want them to grow rapidly, and in their enthusiasm often overtax the baby's digestive power. A food that is too rich, or one of proper strength but given in amounts too large or given too frequently, may produce diarrhea. It is not safe to feed the baby whenever he cries, for he may cry because he has already had too much food. Nor is it safe to give the baby all the food he will take, for most infants will take more than is good for them, and then will follow indigestion, diarrhea and, perhaps, death. If it becomes necessary to wean the baby and give artificial food—and this should be done on the advice of a competent physician—the kind of artificial food, its composition, preparation and care should be directed by some one who knows, which should have their food at regular intervals and in definite amounts, determined by the age of the baby, its capacity for digesting its food properly, and other considerations of greater or less importance.

Fresh air and sunlight are among the greatest conservators of human life. This applies especially in infancy. The baby that sleeps in an ill ventilated room where sunlight never enters will not thrive and is more easily made ill from slight causes. It is to the baby's advantage to take him outdoors as much as possible. In extremely hot weather let him have his airing early in the morning and late in the afternoon, thus avoiding the depressing effects of the heat of midday. His daily naps are best taken in a cool, quiet place out of doors, if possible, at such times.—Dr. Olin West in Southern Agricultural.

Plant Locust Trees.

The black locust is probably the best plant to use for the reclamation of the lands worst eroded, and the best thing to plant on many steep slopes which are bound to wash away if continued in cultivation, but other plants are available. On thousands of acres Bermuda grass will be the best thing to plant. Thousands of smaller gullies can certainly be stopped, tens of thousands of acres too steep or too susceptible to washing for profitable cultivation can certainly be saved, by the planting of Bermuda. The Kudzu vine also promises to be valuable for this purpose, and the planting of honeysuckles on many steep banks is well worth while.

The farmers who have these eroding lands should wake up to the folly of permitting such destruction to continue and to the profits to be had from stopping it. They should set themselves to stop every gully they have, and, equally important, to important, to prevent the starting of any new ones. This means for the farmers of this part of West Tennessee that they must discontinue their present unwise and utterly indefensible policy of running the rows of their cultivated crops up and down hill. Just such foolish methods as these are responsible for many of the waste acres now in their fields, and as long as they continue to plow up and down the slopes instead of around them they will continue to start new gullies faster than they can stop old ones.—Southern Agriculturist.

Health About Gone

Many thousands of women suffering from womanly trouble, have been benefited by the use of Cardui, the woman's tonic, according to letters we receive, similar to this one from Mrs. Z. V. Spell, of Hayne, N. C. "I could not stand on my feet, and just suffered terribly," she says. "As my suffering was so great, and he had tried other remedies, Dr. —— had us get Cardui. . . . I began improving, and it cured me. I know, and my doctor knows, what Cardui did for me, for my nerves and health were about gone."

TAKECARDUI*The Woman's Tonic

She writes further: "I am in splendid health . . . can do my work. I feel I owe it to Cardui, for I was in dreadful condition." If you are nervous, rundown and weak, or suffer from headache, backache, etc., every month, try Cardui. Thousands of women praise this medicine for the good it has done them, and many physicians who have used Cardui successfully with their women patients, for years, endorse this medicine. Think what it means to be in splendid health, like Mrs. Spell. Give Cardui a trial.

Sows Rye and Crimson Clover for Sheep.

I live in the ridge country, where the grass is not first-class especially so in the late fall and early spring. To carry my sheep through the year successfully it is necessary to sow a pasture crop. For this purpose I use rye and crimson clover, sowing five pecks of rye and ten or twelve pounds of crimson clover per acre. I prepare the land in July or August when I can, and sow the seed from August 10 to September 15. I will sow as late as the 20th or 25th if it is not possible to sow earlier. In this latter case I reduce the clover to about eight or ten pounds per acre and increase the rye to six pecks. I like to have good land for this mixture, and if I try to manure this as fast as I have any to put on it. As soon as I sow the seed I clean out all stables and spread this manure over the thin land as far as it will go. I keep this up as I have manure to put out, and the land can be run over until time to plow the crop under in late April or May. The part I get manured early is practically sure to stand the winter, even if it is sown late.

If I get the clover sown early it is ready to pasture by the latter part of October and is always ready to pasture fairly early in November. However, I can keep my sheep on my meadows through September and October while the rams are with them and do not need the pasture badly until after Christmas, ordinarily. However, I frequently turn on the rye and clover in November and December for awhile. In January, February, March and April the pasture is fine and will carry the sheep and will carry the sheep and lambs through these months with the exception of some of the worst spells of our bad winters. I account for much of my success with this pasture in that I either put it on my best land or manure as near all of it as I can.—R. M. M., in Southern Agriculturist.

The Spelling Bee.

The announcement of an old time spelling contest drew a large crowd to the court-house last Thursday night. Mrs. A. H. Ballard and Mr. J. W. Flowers were the choosers, but they could only get a few to spell, thirteen on a side. Notwithstanding the classes were small, a great deal of interest was manifested. The words were given out by Prof. J. R. Alexander, of Bowling Green, and the book used was the old blue back speller. After a half hour Mr. Flowers' side was exhausted, and Mrs. Ballard was declared the winner.

Just What the Farmers are Looking For.

T. G. Rasner & V. Sullivan have purchased the right of ten counties of the G. M. Bates Patent Gate, Allen, Barren, Green, Adair, Metcalfe, Monroe, Clinton, Wayne, Cumberland and Russell. This is one of the best gates ever invented. It is so simple that any man can make one of the gates. The price is in reach of every farmer. We want to sell every farmer in Adair County a farm-right. We have a demonstration gate between the postoffice and livery barn for the benefit of farmers to inspect. See T. G. Rasner or V. Sullivan, Columbia, Ky. 40-2t

Russell County Loses a Good Citizen.

Mr. Jerome Benard, who was one of the best citizens in Russell county, died in a hospital, at Louisville, last week. His remains were conveyed to his home and the funeral and burial took place at Concord Church last Wednesday. He was a victim of paralysis, and he had gone to Louisville for treatment, dying in a few days after his arrival. To show his popularity, he made three races for office, in Russell county, as a Democrat, the county being about four hundred Republican. In one race he was defeated by one vote, another by 5 votes and the third was very close.

A great many relatives and friends attended the last sad rites.

Notice.

On Saturday, August 11th, 1917, at the hour of 1:30 p.m., the fiscal court of Adair county will receive bids for the construction of the road beginning at the corporate limits of the town of Columbia and going in the direction of Jamestown, Russell county, Kentucky. A Notable Educator Lectures.

The teachers of Adair county were given a great treat last Tuesday evening—The pleasure of hearing Dr. W. A. Ganfield, President of Center College, Danville. The speaker's subject was "Efficiency in Education" and he handled it masterly. He not only dwelt on efficiency in education, but in every other laudable undertaking. The production was evidently worth much to the teachers and to all who were in the audience. The perfect language of the speaker and the impressive manner in which he addresses a congregation, has given him a nation wide reputation as an educator and of character building. His visit to Columbia will linger in the minds of those who heard him for many weeks.

Before Dr. Ganfield took the stand there were several songs rendered and a reading by Miss Frances Strange, who recently passed the High School examination. Her selection was "The Lost Chord" and it was delivered most beautifully, and some parts of it very pathetically. It was rendered with out embarrassment and the articulation was distinct, making it very appreciative.

Married at Jamestown.

Last Thursday at high noon in the parlors of the Jamestown hotel, Henry L. Conover and Miss Bessie Cravens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. P.

Cravens, were married. Rev. J. A. Wallace, of the Methodist church officiated. After the ceremony the happy couple drove to the home of the groom, two miles out of town, where supper was served. The groom is a prosperous young gentleman, one who has many friends. The bride is a popular young lady and one who has the esteem of all who know her. May only good come from this union.

It Is Started.

The road spirit is asserting its power in the Milltown section and within a short time that section will possess several miles of fine road. The people of that community have decided that the way to build roads is to get together and every man do his part. We are informed that they have decided to grade and gravel at least four miles of their road before real farm pressure is on them again. This movement is under the direction of Mr. F. P. Dohoney and regardless of where a man lives in that section, whether on or off the road, being improved, he is there to do his part. Fifteen teams and thirty men were at work last week and more expected to be there this week. Other communities ought to get busy and do as Milltown is doing. August and September are the months to do the work. We congratulate the Milltown people for their enterprise and the power and effect of example.

J. F. Lucas Dies at Cape Girardeau.

Last Thursday, July 5th, death came to another one of our most beloved and highly respected citizens, J. F. Lucas, in the St. Francis Hospital at Cape Girardeau, Missouri. Death was caused by the new infantile disease so prevalent in southeast Missouri, known as illoscrosis.

Mr. Lucas became sick while staying at one of the Cape Girardeau hotels, and in a couple of days was removed to the hospital. Death came within a week.

The night before his death his family was notified that he was not expected to live, and his wife started from here, and his son, Kemper, from Blissville, Arkansas, to Cape Girardeau, but before they arrived he was dead.

The remains were brought back to his home in Marshfield and funeral services were held Saturday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the Christian Church. His old friend and pastor, Rev. F. M. Hooten, conducted the services. He was then laid to rest in the Marshfield city of the dead.

He leaves a sister, wife and eight children to mourn his loss. His sister is Mrs. J. W. Worley, of Roanoke, Va. The children are Misses Eugenia and Pauline, and Messrs. Kemper, of Blissville, Arkansas, Clarence of Tulsa, Oklahoma, Russell, of Eldorado, Kansas, Porter, Francis and Thurman. All the children are living.

J. F. Lucas was born November 21, 1858, and died July 5, 1917, being 58 years, 5 months and 14 days old. He moved to Missouri from Kentucky over fifteen years ago, and had lived in Marshfield most of this time. He spent the latter years of his life as a traveling man and all who knew him, either in a business or social way, knew him to be a fine, straightforward man. He was a leader in his church, and always worked hard for the advancement of his Master's Kingdom. The family have the heartfelt sympathy of every one.—The Marshfield, Mo., Mail.

Mr. Lucas was well known in this part of the State having sold nursery stock and musical instruments for several years. He was a gentleman of the truest type, capable and successful in his business undertakings. His death removes one of our best friends. We bore the heat and burden together for several years and know him to be a man worthy of the esteem and love of all who really appreciate true men. Peace to his memory and blessings to the surviving members of his family.—Ed.

Latest War News.

David Lloyd George, the British Premier, in an address at Queens Hall, London, yesterday, declared that no one in any of the warring Powers knew how near the aims of the Allies were to fulfillment. He declared that the Kaiser and the German Chancellor had never spoken of peace without annexations of restoration. He declared that these two men would have to learn the meaning of the word "restoration" and come to any peace conference with that word foremost before the Allies would consent to discuss peace. He declared that all of England—every class—had made sacrifices for the war and that every class must have a word in the making of peace. He expressed the confidence that the entry of the United States into the war had given the Allies

Although continuing to advance at many points on the Russian front, the German forces of the Flanders front are slowly being pushed back by the Entente forces. Following the British advances Friday night, the French drove forward in the Ypres front east of Kortekier Cabaret. The British recaptured the remainder of the Monty le Preux trench during Friday night. The German official statement says all of Galicia except one small strip has been cleared of Russians. The Russian statement declares that stiffer resistance is being offered the advancing Germans, but that because of reasons of morale some units still are in retreat.

France is stronger to-day in fighting men and war materials than at any time during the war, despite three years of terrific combat of which the greatest share among the Allies has fallen to the French armies, according to a message to the American people given by Andre Tardieu, High Commissioner of France in the United States. It is a question now of striking the last blow at the adversary and the United States will help, he declared.

Take Notice:

Do you wish to enjoy the satisfaction of knowing that the Tombstone or Monument you erect as a final tribute to the one you loved, and whose memory you wish to pass down to posterity, will not only be a fitting and beautiful memorial, but will also endure through ages to come? If you do, your attention is called to the many monuments of Marble and Granite which I have placed in the Cemetery at Columbia and surrounding burying grounds, which will show you the beauty and durability of the material used in their construction, and attesting the care and neatness with which my work is done.

Call on O. P. Bush, Columbia, Ky., and tell him what you want, and he will make you prices within easy reach of all. Give him your order and you will be sure to get the best on the market.

Insurance records show that drink shortens life eleven percent.

Safety and health of the public improve by lessening the use of alcohol.

It is necessary that he should enter upon his work with a clear mind and a mastery of himself that he can never have if addicted to the use of strong liquor.

Caught between the iron side and the mattress of her bed the 10-months-old daughter of Dr. C. A. Hartley, of Evansville, Ind., was smothered to death.
